

Critical Summary Activity:

Directions: The critical summary sentences below are out of order. Arrange the critical summary sentences into their proper places. You do need to write each sentence and the letter.

- A. This story is about King's task to fight inequality in Birmingham. King uses rhetoric such as ethos, pathos, and logos to drive his main point: inequality is wrong.
- B. The story "Letter from a Birmingham Jail", by Martin Luther King jr., is an excellent story because it teaches you about fighting injustice.
- C. Anytime there is injustice we should all stand and fight until justice is given to all! You must read this story because so that you too can help fight against wrong doings.
- D. The author does a good job detailing how to engage in a peaceful protest and why all people should have equal rights. For example, " Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere, because we are tied together in a single garment of destiny." This shows that King believed every single person should be treated fairly.
